Keeping Up Appearances.

Extravagance is the rock on which society is going to pieces. Let us face the danger before it is too late to avert it. Single people shrink from marriage because they see married people are living in a perpetual whirl of bills and competition and social hypocrisy. An air of common deception hangs around all our houses. We are afraid to be poor. On one thousand a year, how shall we keep up the appearance of three thousand? That is the standing social problem. In such a case, luxury in the parlor necessitates meanness somewhere else. Our lace curtains tell dreary lies. Let us have a reform and come down to a specie basis. The well-to-do people ornament their houses with mortgages. The poor run bills.
High pressure marks all life from the cottage to the mansion, and in three directions it is ruinous.

It is financial ruin.

Any man who puts a dollar into appearances is on the way to sink a fortune in the same miry slough. Living costs about twice what it ought, fully twice in America what it does in Europe. There is no reason for it. This is a land of grain and fruits, and abundant work. The man who spends two thousand a year could live on one thousand and be happier. Perhaps not indeed by himself. The social level needs to sink from extravagance to thrifty economy. If this is the way out of national trouble, it is doubly the way out of family worries. Be brave enough to decline appearances. Be honest straight through your domestic arrangements, though the two-story must yield to the cottage, and the puppeting to cornmeal.

It is mental ruin.

The money that is spent on horses and dress and table unecessaries would fill all our homes with books. The expensive furniture would be well replaced by pictures, to be a constant refining and enlightening influence. The money it costs many a family of moderate means to keep up four weeks of appearances at the sea shore would fill their house with treasures of knowledge and art. Instead of that glorious month at Long Branch—followed by eleven months of scrimping in the kitchen and general meanness all around.

It is moral ruin.

People cannot systematically deceive without moral penalty even though the lies are velvet and silken. The penalty comes in the loss of self-respect. The man who mortgages his property to keep up the family style thereby mortgages his name to the devil. Instead of studying moral philosophy to find the causes of general social disorder—loosening of home bonds and lowering of purity—let us come down to an honest way of living. Let us make our carpets and table and our clothes tell the truth, and then perhaps our children will. A blight will surely fall on all our social life unless we recover ourselves from that great American vice—trunking—and live honestly before men. The seeds of hypocrisy are in the heart of every child that goes out from a household whose life is a sham.
In vain we preach honesty and sincerity from the pulpit, so long as the life from the pulpit wood to the home-management is all a pretense. Society, you must come down and dare to appear what you are.—Interior.

A Sketch.

Far in the depth of the northern forest of British America there lived an old hunter, with his wife and two children.
He usually visited the settlement three or four times during the year, when he exchanged his furs for such things as he might need till his next visit.

It was during one of those long, cold Winters, when all kinds of games became very scarce, that the hunter discovered he had not sufficient food to last his family through the dreary Winter. Morning after morning he strapped on his snow shoes and went out in the dark swamps and woodlands in search of game; only to return at night empty-handed, discouraged, and heartsick. At length, about the last particle of food in the cabinet had been eaten, and the hunter determined to visit a brother hunter, who lived a number of miles distant, to endeavor to get some food to last them until he could kill some game. But all he could procure was a few turnips, which he placed in his knapsack, and commenced his journey back to his cabin. The snow was falling at a fearful rate, and the wind sighed and moaned through the forest, as if warning every one away from their solitary wilds. Still the hunter kept on his lonely way until the dark shades of night began to settle around him.
Weary and hungry he rested for a short time, and taking one of the turnips, which had been frozen as hard as ice since he commenced his journey, he cut it in small pieces and ate it. He rested but a short time however, when he resumed his journey, and thought it was so dark, he could no longer see the marks upon the trees which guided his course he constructed a torch, by the light of which he was able to continue on his way. It was some time after midnight when he arrived at his cabin.
His wife, though nearly starved, soon prepared a meal from the frozen turnips. The hunter, being entirely exhausted, lay down upon a couch of deer-skins, but soon complained of being sick. He grew rapidly worse and died before morning. The wife knew not what to do, but succeeded in gathering enough fuel to keep the fire burning a short time. A day and a night of their fearful suffering passed. The last mouthful of food had been devoured. A few rats crept from the holes in the cabin and began to feed upon the body of the hunter, which had not been removed from the place in which he died.
Some of these family were able to kill, which they eagerly devoured. Even the deer-skins, which were used for bedding, were cut in pieces and partly eaten up. The wife being no longer able to procure fuel for the fire, lay down upon the floor by her children to await death to relieve them of their suffering.

The hunter of whom they had received some assistance, thinking of the destitude circumstances in which they might be, visited them, when he found them in this suffering condition. The mother and one child were yet alive, but the younger child was dead and frozen. The hunter, after providing them with sufficient food and fuel for a number of days, started to the settlement, and after a few days' absence he returned with a party of a dozen men, who placed the woman and child upon a litter, and after a weary journey through the wilderness, reached the settlement, they were cared for until their recovery.

It appeared the hunter, who haddied, was very fond of strong drink, and during his last trip to the settlement had, instead of procuring a sufficient stock of Winter provisions, exchanged his fur for liquor, and was not able to visit the settlement again.—Witness.

eighty less than two years ago, and they've got to throw away their single bedsteads or become an extinct sect.

—One of the meanest things a small boy can do is to put tacks in the chairs when he knows that a young man is coming to call on his sister that evening.

—"Lord, what a cow!" was the approving remark of a teetotal judge of Vermont after swallowing a potent punch, which had been offered to him as a glass of milk.

—"Do you know your good pastor's chief end and aim?" asked a New York Sunday-school teacher of her favorite pupil. "Yes," replied the sagacious child, "to get his sermons printed in the papers."

—A showman whose notices called for a few fat boys to "feed his cannibals" received a card from a man saying that he couldn't
